Through the Red Doors

A photograph of a red door with a white text box overlay. The door has several small windows and a handle. There are signs on the door, including a yellow 'CAUTION DOOR' sign and a blue 'CAUTION OPENS TOWARD YOU' sign. The text box contains the following text:

Trexler Library is your go-to campus spot for online and physical resources, research consultations, study spaces, technology, and events.

I like the library because I like walking into a building where I know everyone is trying to hustle, get important things done, and improve. People say you become who you surround yourself with, so it feels motivating to surround myself with people who are working to better themselves.

I love to do work in the library because it makes me feel productive. Even if I'm with a group of friends or curled up in an armchair I can focus. Plus, if I ever need something from paper clips to scissors I know that I'll be able to borrow it and it saves me a trip back to my dorm plus keeps me from breaking my concentration.

I've worked at Trexler Library for three semesters now and I've never regretted applying. The Circulation Desk environment is quiet and relaxing. My favorite aspects of working at the library are the opportunities I have to discover new books while shelving or checking them back in.

I like working at the library, because of the work environment and my co-workers and supervisors. The work atmosphere is relaxed and working at the circulation desk also gave me the opportunity to get to know the other student workers. Being some of the first faces people see when they enter the library, it's introduced me to people from all over the Muhlenberg community.

Trexler Library has a calm and focused environment about it that really attracts me. There are so many areas to do work and study that I often vary the places that I choose to do my own work, depending on my mood or even the assignment. Furthermore, the staff members of Trexler are not only great resources, but wonderful people I'm very grateful to know.
