Reception to follow

Rodica Draghinescu was born in Romania. She is part of the "90's generation," a movement of nonconformist Romanian writers born out of the fall of the Ceausescu regime. Before moving to France, she was Professor of French literature and researcher in linguistics and stylistics at the Romanian Academy and held writing residencies in Germany. She now works as literary advisor to several French cultural institutions. In addition to poetry, she has published novels, collections of interviews and literary essays.
